Hi there,

Thank you again for taking the time to speak with me this week. It was really valuable and I appreciate you sharing your experience.

Following our conversation, I'm very keen to continue looking into this further. From what I've heard so far, it does feel like there could be a significant and important story here.

Following our conversation, I'm very keen to continue looking into this further. From what I've heard so far, it does feel like there could be a significant and important story here.

If you're comfortable in doing so, I would appreciate being connected to any other one else who may be willing to share their experiences (with their prior consent, of course). Even off-the-record conversations would be incredibly helpful at this stage.

You're welcome to forward the following information to them to explain more:

I'm a UK-based documentary producer with over 20 years' experience, currently working with Twenty Twenty, a production company that is part of Warner Bros. Discovery.

Last year, we produced a Netflix series, Love Con Revenge, which led to criminal convictions and became the most successful unscripted launch of 2025, reaching 14 million viewers in its first few weeks.

We are now developing a new series for a global streamer, focusing on individuals who have had experience with Daniel Duval and/or Bride Ministries. Our showrunner previously worked on the Leah Remini Scientology documentary, so we are very mindful of handling sensitive and complex stories with care and rigour, and are well placed to tell this story.

If the project progresses, our aim would be to thoroughly investigate any potential wrongdoing, and enlist experts, such as legal specialists, private investigators and former law enforcement where appropriate.

At this stage, I am simply looking to speak with as many people as possible to better understand and assess whether there is a case to pursue. Even if appearing on screen is not something you would consider, your perspective could still be extremely valuable in helping us build a clearer case.

All information shared would be kept strictly confidential.

I would appreciate if my details and endeavours were also kept confidential as it could hamper our investigation should it become widely known of at this time.
